To Whom This May Concern,

My name is Mario Scarpa and I'm currently the Head of Industrial design at Diesel, in charge of the design of licensed products.

I'm proud to offer my recommendation of Samuele Cazzin to whom I have personally known for three years, first as an industrial design internship at Diesel, and in the following two years as a junior eyewear designer at Marcolin, where he was in charge of the development of the Diesel eyewear collection in cooperation with my team.

Samuele is a talented designer, constantly willing to improve his skills and abilities, and never afraid to work hard to achieve his goals. Since the first day we had the chance to work together for instance, his sketching skills made a tremendous jump, as he was able to practice and learn new instruments and techniques, turning one of his initial weaknesses into one of his major strengths.

Versatility is a key aspect of Samuele as a designer, thanks to his ability to face different fields of design with a strong eye: from conceiving to a more graphical 2D aspect, 3D modeling and rendering.

But what makes a good designer to me is not only about the way you represent your ideas, but actually the way you are able to channel your creativity: in this field Samuele is a structured individual, that acquired a methodology of work, both as an individual designer, as well as a team member.

Creativity needs to be fueled continuously, and Samuele found his way to feed his vision thanks to an endless curiosity towards every field of life, and a deep attention to design and fashion. This aspect of him represents a powerful driver for every team that will acquire Samuel as a member, especially considering that all his talent is embodied in a kind and respectful person, that will make the work environment fun, fluid and efficient.

In short, talent, curiosity, hard-working attitude, great personal skills and respect for the people that he works with, make of Samuele a candidate that I would not hesitate to hire, and that could find his place even in complex working environment.

Please do not hesitate to contact me if you should require any further information.

Best,
